The Royal Society of Biology of the United Kingdom and the Higher Council for Education and Research (HCERES) of France have accredited the Masters of Science (MSc) and Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) programmes run by the Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria on neglected tropical diseases.

The university's Africa Center of Excellence in Neglected Tropical Disease and Forensic Biotechnology (ACENTDFB) got the nod of the two European institutions to start the two postgraduate academic degrees with effect from September, 2019 to September, 2024.

Head of ABU's Public Affairs Directorate, Dr. Sama'ila Shehu, made this known, saying that the programmes are domiciled in the Department of Biochemistry.

He added: "This is the first set of degree programmes of this university to gain international accreditation. The center leader, Professor Yakubu K.E. Ibrahim presented the certificate of the accreditation to the Vice Chancellor, Professor Ibrahim Garba." "In 2017, the MSc and PhD Biotechnology and the Postgraduate Diploma (PGD) Forensic Biotechnology programme of the center acquired full accreditation from the National Universities Commission (NUC). The VC congratulated the center and lauded their efforts and achievement."
